The NGCalsync utility is a small application designed to help sync Lotus Notes calendars with a personal Google Calendar, whose use is free. NGCalsync Description: ngcalsync can make use of the Web Services portion of Lotus Connections to synchronize with google calendar. If you have the "Calendars" server setup correctly, your Lotus notes calendar should be shown in google calendar. Google calendar can be configured to have your calendar appear automatically. Then when you have your lotus notes calendar synchronized (LN must have a valid URL available on the server), gCal can be configured to be your outlook/lync/fastmail/... on the web calendars.

ngcalsync uses the Microsoft calendar sync engine in the Lotus Notes client and it will correctly detect and convert records to-from the Lotus Notes calendar and gCal, iCal and mobi files. This utility comes in two parts, a client and a web server. The web server part is only available for the beta version of Microsoft calendar sync engine (NCAL). This means that the web server will not be available for later versions of Microsoft calendar sync engine (NCAL) ngcalsync Instructions: Download NGCALsync 1.4b and unzip it to any directory. The location of this directory has to be defined in the application configuration or you can simply use the "lib" directory in the app installation directory. Open a DOS window and execute "ngcalsync.exe -pathFile:" where the pathFile option tells the system what path you want to have in your configuration if you haven't already defined it. If you did not use the -pathFile: option, you can execute it using the full path to the program from your installation directory. Build your own Server for ncalsync. You can build a server for ncalsync that supports Microsoft calendar sync engine: To run the ncalsync server you must have the ncalsync.exe in your PATH enviroment variable. To configure the build you simply have to provide the path to the application and the path to the web start index.html file and you are ready to go. This server must be built for the beta version of the Microsoft calendar sync engine

(NCAL). ngcalsync -serverServerPath:x:\serverBin -pathFile:"x:\serverBin\server g b7e8fdf5c8
