searching and manipulation of specific numbers. I've done it in Java and C# and I would like to do it in C++. I looked at Boost.Int64 and my next thought was to create a `std::array` then add to this `std::array` from a derived class instead of the data type I'm storing the data in. So I would have the array and the data from the class inside the array. My problem is I can't have two typedefs with the same name in my program. Is there a way to do this? I'm not too concerned about the extra memory needed here, I'm more interested in if there are good alternative solutions for my problem. A: In C++ there is no need to have a polymorphic data structure in your container. Instead you can just keep your data inside the normal container. The only time you would need a polymorphic data structure would be for the case that your data is an interface (In C++ the last type to derive is abstract). But the functionality would be provided by a class derived

The present study was designed to evaluate the potential protective effects of Salvia miltiorrhiza Roxb. (Salviae miltiorrhizae), Sanguisorba officinalis L. (Sanguisorbae officinalis), Thymus vulgaris L. (Thymus vulgaris), and Achillea millefolium L. (Achilleae millefolium) against Cd-induced toxicity in rats. Adult male Wistar rats were randomly divided into 9 groups, which included control and treated rats. All groups except the control group were treated with CdCl<sub>2</sub> (at a dose of 8 mg/kg b.w., dissolved in saline) via oral gavage in a volume of 0.2 ml for three times, 48 hours apart. Animals were divided into five groups, one of which was used to measure the activity of antioxidant enzymes. The remaining four groups were killed 48 hours after administration of cadmium. All of the herbal extracts were administered for 14 days before CdCl<sub>2</sub> administration. In addition, before the final administration of herbal extracts, the first group was treated with a single high dose of n-acetylcysteine (NAC) (300 mg/kg b.w.) to investigate the protective effect of NAC. Blood was obtained for the measurement of nitrite and nitrate content, hydrogen peroxide content, and antioxidant enzyme activity. The thymus and blood samples were also taken for histopathological examination. Salviae miltiorrhizae, Achillea millefolium, and Sanguisorbae officinalis significantly increased the activity of antioxidant enzymes in the blood and the blood elements; this effect was pronounced in the group treated with S. miltiorrhizae. Nrf2/ARE signaling pathway and Sirtuin-1 were also activated by the extracts in erythrocytes. The first episode of The Big
