Now you can recover your deleted files in seconds. Virus / spyware / adware has found its way into my computer in the form of home.xxx.com redirect or redirecting me to pita.com. My computer is running Windows XP SP2. I'd like to resolve the redirect and remove the infection. I have used several anti virus programs, including the Norton Anti Virus program and all were unable to resolve the problem. I've tried downloading spyware programs such as spywareblaster, spywarebuster etc. to no avail. I've even tried reformatting and reinstalling Windows XP with no success. I am very much tired of this problem. I want to get rid of this home.xxx.com and pita.com. Has anyone been successful in resolving this problem? It's so annoying. Thanks! I need to recover any important files I may have deleted with this file

ROSTOV-ON-DON, Russia — Even though it's normally sunny in the Volga city of Rostov-on-Don, winter got in full swing this past weekend. Cold winds from Siberia blasted into the city's historic center on Saturday morning, around 7 a.m. local time, with temperatures below zero degrees Celsius. The Siberian air made for a stark contrast with the previous evening, when temperatures rose slightly above zero and many locals cracked open their windows to catch a wave of warm spring air they were getting a taste of before season's end on May 9. As the cold snap moved in from the north, so did a blast of smoke from the largest wildfire in Russian history. Fires in Siberia have raged for weeks on end, and this blaze, the Yamal-Nenetschik, covers an area the size of Poland, Latvia, and Spain combined. Experts say it's burning more than half a million hectares of wilderness. As of Monday, the blaze was still burning. According to Valentina Chernova, first secretary of the Russian delegation in Rostov-on-Don, the federal government had granted permission for local authorities to use water cannons to try to put out the blaze, which is threatening villages near the northern border of Russia and some of the most pristine nature in Siberia. "We understand that it's a very difficult situation," Chernova told The Daily Beast. "We understand that on the morning
