In a manufacturing process of a semiconductor device, various processing procedures may be employed such as etching, oxidizing, and ion implanting in forming an integrated circuit. Most of the components of a semiconductor device are formed using a method in which a reactive gas is supplied from a gas supply system to a wafer, for example, a processing wafer. In such a method, the reactive gas is supplied by pressure-reducing the reactive gas from a high pressure state to a low pressure state. In this case, the reactive gas is supplied while gas pressure of the reactive gas supplied in a space in the gas supply system is adjusted to a predetermined pressure. In a gas supply system, a diffusion pumping chamber having a gas supply port is connected to a reactive gas supply chamber or a storage chamber formed of a bottle, from which the reactive gas is supplied under a pressure. Then, a pressure-reducing valve is located between the diffusion pumping chamber and a processing chamber (for example, see Patent Document 1).Q: How to keep menu bar fixed on its position? . The single-stage adaptation of BioT was conducted using the E. coli host of proprietary NADH-regenerating, glucose-grown processes developed to support the complex microbiome communities of bioreactors comprising Woodland Combo Evolution. Here the traditional CRISPR/Cas-cell factory workflow was optimized such that the two-stage combination of BL21 and BioT Evolution is utilized for both the initial and subsequent stages. Here the genetic modifications of interest are easily expressed during the BioT procedures, mitigating the need to reinvent the wheel each time yet also providing a convenient platform for the remainder of the CRISPR/Cas components The evolved libraries of MegaX & AltX were further screened by conventional Sanger sequencing to identify valid and fully suited CRISPR/Cas systems. Discovery rate of MegaX and AltX was nearly 100% Libraries of the two new CRISPR/Cas systems identified were sent to New England Biolabs for sequencing. LibA-MegaX yielded nearly 96% correctly assembled sequence (2,287 out of 2,389 Read 1 Read 2 Read 3 Genes are known), while LibM-AltX yielded nearly 94% correctly assembled sequence (1,923 out of 2,003 Read 1 Read 2 Read 3 Genes are known) (Figure 11A). This was despite both evolving from a very small starting library size of 40 cells (~0.1% library coverage). All traceable mutations identified were therefore inherited from the starting library. These results show the faithful evolutionary potential of CRISPR/Cas systems. The three distinct CRISPR/Cas systems identified within the MegaX library were MegaX-A, MegaX-C and MegaX-D. The cells harboring any of these three systems were further cloned onto a diagnostic agar plate. Direct visualization of cell morphology showed that all three loci led to defective cells (Figure 11B,C), with cells having multiple surfaces and vesicles. Further analysis of the three mutant loci revealed that all were G→A transitions (Table S6). Neither G to T or C to A transitions occurred, suggesting that these represent transitions mediated by DNA polymerases rather than recombination-based alternative mechanisms. Zooming in onto the genomic context of this locus reveals that altered PAMs adjacent to the spacer sequence are detected at the MegaX loci (Figure S6B–S6E). These BL21 cells were then extracted for plasmid pur
