TORAINUS In a distant land where the Endless Plains and the Undefined River surge, resides a great wonder. It rests in the middle of the world, and its doors are open to all who stand upon the threshold. But once they enter, no one ever returns, and so, even though it is standing as a ruin, there are those who call it the Elden Ring. "Come to the Elden Ring, adventurers." THE FEATURED GAME. Your face has been dusted with a fine ash by the roaring wind, and you hear the sound of leaves rustling in the distance. The ground is steep, and there are dense bushes lining the slope. There are no trees here, no flowers, and only a few fallen cedars. The air is cold. "What's this? There's a path!" The sound of footsteps can be heard clearly on the ground. ◇ The adventurer returns to his senses. "Hmm, that's strange, I'm home!" There's no town called Tarnorius in this world, nor can this really be the hometown of an adventurer. "So this must be some kind of illusion?" The adventurer turns to look at his surroundings. "I'm not sure, but it feels like... I'm home..." The adventurer's eyes return to the path. Walking next to him is a girl. "Hmm. She's a girl." The adventurer says this with a somewhat uncertain voice. "Hey, are you lost too?" "Yes, I'm lost." The adventurer's voice is a bit soft. "That's strange, you're all alone and the sense of direction is incorrect too. Do you know that you're lost?" "I'm lost. My parents are gone too." "Oh. That's terrible." The adventurer looks at the girl with sympathy in his eyes. "Are you going home?" "Yes." "Ah, that's good. I'm going to find my hometown too." The adventurer's voice becomes more stable. "I don't know who my parents are either." "Oh, that's okay. I'm here to search for someone, too." "Oh! But your voice seems familiar to me. Are you an Eld

If you would like to know more about our characters please follow this link. Atorvastatin and aspirin impair endothelial progenitor cells recruitment following cerebral ischemia. Post-reperfusion injury and the shedding of endothelial progenitor cells (EPC) from the intima is associated with increased injury and poor neurologic outcome after stroke. In this study, we analyzed the effect of the natural hypolipemic agent atorvastatin and of the nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID) aspirin on the recruitment of EPC from human bone marrow in rats after transient middle cerebral artery (MCA) occlusion. Male Wistar rats, stimulated with endothelial colony-forming cells (ECFCs), were exposed to MCA occlusion (45 min) followed by reperfusion. Experimental groups were: 1) atorvastatin-treated animals (40 mg/kg ip, n = 6); 2) aspirin-treated animals (10 mg/kg ip, n = 9); 3) saline-treated animals (n = 10); and 4) sham-operated animals (n = 10). EPC were stained with double-labeling immunohistochemistry, and the sites of ECFC recruitment in the ischemic brain region were quantified by direct comparison of the number of ECFC-labeled cells in the periischemic and contralateral brain areas, 7 days after MCA occlusion. Both atorvastatin and aspirin treatment inhibited the number of bone marrow-derived EPC in the ischemic region, whereas similar injections of saline did not affect EPC number. In aspirin-treated animals, however, the dramatic fall in the number of bone marrow-derived EPC induced by cerebral ischemia was significantly attenuated. By this study, we provide the first evidence that atorvastatin and aspirin impair ECFC migration as well as homing after cerebral ischemia in a rat model. The effect of atorvastatin and aspirin might, at least in part, be mediated by their salutary effects on NO and PGI₂, which, in turn, modulate endothelial integrity as well as ECFC homeostatic mechanisms.
