Refereeing New international referees that will challenge preconceived notions of what soccer is and how referees officiate. • New ball physics that allows the ball to bounce differently depending on the surface, challenging players to adjust to the ball. • Tactical Disadvantage, which reduces the ball's chance of going out of play by a small amount for the first nine minutes of a game. • Touchlines, which are lines in the pitch that the referee will use to determine where the ball is in play, allowing players to work differently based on the touchline – running down the middle, for example, in a more 'American' game. • VAR
