Thanks for watching. Backup When it comes to putting an important file onto a USB flash drive, we all know you have the option of putting the drive into its own folder that serves as a backup, so that if you get the chance to redo the drive, you'll have the same drive contents as the original drive. If you want to do this, great. Or you can copy all the files on the drive to one of your computer's hard drive directories. These options are good and all, but they can be much slower for large drives. Another thing you might do when backing up your flash drive is to copy it to your computer's hard drive, storing it in the same directory as the rest of your stuff. The reason why this might not be such a good idea is because as your drive fills up with data, you'll have to empty out your entire computer's directory just to keep your stuff on the flash drive. What about just copying the contents of the flash drive to the computer's directory? That's much better. If you do this, you're going to have a file on your computer that serves as a guide to the contents of your

Here is my code so far which works fine, except the fadeIn effect at the end. $(document).ready(function() { $(".a").hover(function() { $(this).children("span").show(); }, function() { $(this).children("span").hide(); }); }); I need a fade in effect to add text at the top of the line of text when it's clicked. I was thinking of using setTimeout to animate the text after the fadeIn effect. Does anyone have any experience doing this? A: $(document).ready(function() { $(".a").hover(function() {
