The Civil War never ended, it was just over. In the war for the North and for the South the US Army went into action at the same time as the Navy and other services. As the Second "War to the knife" got underway, the North constructed a powerful and efficient industrial complex and was even gaining the upper hand on the Confederate forces. After the first naval battle of the Union fleet - the battle of Hampton Roads, the South got the upper hand and made the first inroads in the North with their victories at the Battle of Roanoke Island and the Battle of Securus River. However, the Northern shipyards got back into action, and began building better and more numerous battleships to take the war to the South. The Southern navy still had its own powerhouses, but had troubles of organization and were short of supplies. A three-year battle began, the first naval battle of ironclad ships, in which the North won the first victory with the first ironclad - USS Monitor. Through four campaigns the North and South fought more naval battles, placing limits on each side's forces and making them a match for each other. The war to the knife continued, first with land battles, and in which the Confederate general Robert E. Lee was the most famous and effective officer. There are games that are "essential" to the franchise, and then there are games that stick out in your memory like a glowing neon beacon. Portal is one of the first truly essential games in a long time. Let's start this off in a bit of an odd place. Portal 2 isn't like many other games in this day and age. It did not go from being a solid, competent Portal game to sequel, it is Portal. It doesn't mean that Portal 2 is bad. In fact, I would argue that Portal 2 is an incredible game. But in my memory, it is Portal. It is a game I played constantly in high school. You see, to me, Portal 2 is synonymous with Wendy's doorknob jokes. Let me explain. In Portal 2, while still on the run, you get to jump into the body of a genderbent Atlas. Portal 2 is set after the events of Portal, and you get to play Portal 2 because you have now constructed the portal gun. The blue portal gun. Only to have it stolen away from you by an equally colored but complete teleportation system. The portal gun has to be saved, and in

But we may not hear much more than whether it will slap a 10% dividend increase on the company's shares. After all, it is the same 10% dividend that has been paid for the past year. Analysts have been forecasting that dividends would rise and be paid out after profit figures came in above expectations at the end of last year. It is also a firm which is currently in talks with US power company Nuclear Development and Engineering (NuAge) about the sale of the company's civil nuclear business, Nuclear Power Partners. NuAge has offered to buy the business for £1.5bn, cash and debt. The sellers, Babcock and Rolls-Royce, have said they would hold talks with NuAge, but that the deal was not done yet. But the market has been enjoying the prospect of a big increase in dividends to Babcock's shareholders - the dividend has been issued on a semi-annual basis. In this year's dividend, the share-owners will have been rewarded for any improvement in profits made by the engineering giant over the past year. Analysts had forecast that profits would come in at around £1.8bn for the year to March, slightly higher than last year's figures of £1.6bn. That would be seen as a welcome increase over the last year, which saw profits fall to £1.4bn. Over that time, the share price of the company has risen by more than a third, to £13.35. The Leenokal's glass cannon. I have a mechanical problem that I am hoping to solve. For a long time now I have been running around to try and find a way to revise the Leenokal for my group. But I realized that I have been so caught up in myself, I have not really considered the goals of the table. If you have played a Leenokal you know that there is a glass cannon quality to them. When you make the Leenokal attack, you must choose which attack to make and how strong the attack is. There are 3 types of the attack that can be made: Blows, Pokes and Gun. The only way for the Leenokal to take an attack action in combat, is to attack. Blows deal a number of dice equal to the hit dice of the bearer. The target must take damage equal to the severity of the attack. So if you miss, it only do a number of damage equal to its hit dice. Pokes can do D6 or 2D6 damage to a hit roll. Gun are better than Pokes for tanking monsters. But all of these things are less effective with critical hits. So I am making this attack key point to solve a mechanical problem, but I think it helps me figure out what the table wants. Using
