What's new in Super Space Towers:

"Six Feet Under" is the first episode of the third series of the medical drama television series House. It first aired in the United States on the Fox network on September 21, 2005. In the episode, House leaves the Princeton-Plainsboro Teaching Hospital and moves to Seattle to start his own clinic. Dr. Greg House meets with former teaching hospital colleague Dr. Robert Chase and Dr. Nathaniel Forest, a professor from the University of New York University. As they talk about the current health-care situation and the future of medicine, Nathaniel reveals to House that a patient died under their care during an operation. In doing so, they are forced to come to terms with a surreal series of events; they then place the blame on each other while they do their best to help a dying young woman who had previously died while she was in their care. The episode was written by John Danaher and directed by creator David Shore. A great deal of attention was paid to scene transitions, movement of camera, lighting, and delivery, all in order to suggest six characters simultaneously speaking and moving around a two-story farmhouse. The episode aired in the United Kingdom on BBC One on October 4, 2005, with Peter James Bryant hosting. In the United Kingdom, it was viewed by 11.33 million people and was a modest ratings success. Critical response to the episode was mixed. Danaher and Shore, along with the rest of the cast and crew, were nominated for Emmy Awards in 2005 and 2006 in several categories. Most notably, for writing the episode, Shore won in 2007. Plot The episode starts with House's meeting with Dr. Robert Chase (Jack McGee), who is researching organ donation, and Dr. Nathaniel Forest (Nick Offerman), a surgeon. Chase and Forester, both former co-workers in the Princeton-Plainsboro Teaching Hospital (PPTH), are dating the same woman, Dr. Caroline Murphy (Rosalind Taylor), now a volunteer emergency room doctor at the same hospital. Forester has a young son, Rex (Mackenzie Germer), who was previously in surgery under their care and died. House flies to New York City to investigate a young woman who will die of arteriosclerosis. She is suffering from depression and an overdose of cocaine. The attending physician at the hospital is Dr. Stephen E. Doyle (Bruce Davison), a surgeon who has retired, after which point he spent the entirety of the episode painfully drying a glass
