In the Lands Between, on the southern continent of Tarnagal, a Goddess created the unique race of Elden. The Elden were a race of beings born with the extraordinary power to wield the six "Ancient Rings," powerful items that control powerful magic. At the time, the only one who could use the rings was the Goddess herself. However, after she was killed, not only did the Elden lose the power to use the rings, but they also lost their individuality as Elden and were herded by the evil barbarians into slavery. Here, the Elden were torn apart by the bickering among the races, and were treated as nothing more than beasts to be used and abused. In an attempt to free the Elden from slavery, a group of powerful warriors known as the Order of the Crescent Wolf pledged to protect the Goddess and unite all of the races, and managed to drive out the barbarians. However, they were defeated by a dark force known as the Dark Lord, and all hope seemed to have been lost. However, the same Goddess that caused their suffering would take pity on the Elden and give them the chance at a new life. She commanded the Elden to create a land known as the Lands Between. She would set a special ring into the bracelet of each Elden who would be raised up and protected as a hero, but because of the darkness that was cast upon the Land, this righteous hero would lose his individuality, and would become a slave to the land and its people.

The story told in this game is the tragic fate of these heroes. ■ Key Features FEATURES • A Multilayered Drama An epic drama in which a variety of pieces come together to form a single story. 11:22:582018-11-20 05:04:54Create Your Own Fantasy Action RPG - CSW Reborn within your wavelength. So they might be a function of the wavelength. And there may be some electrons that move along the trajectory. But the important thing is these electrons are moving so that they are involved in interactions with other valence electrons of the atoms in the material that make up a semiconductor that is. And the energies of these states are affected by the QWs as well as by boundary conditions of the environment. So let me summarize what we have done so far. I have showed you that we can build materials for electronic devices directly out of semiconductors. And the important thing is that these semiconductor materials are built from the top down. We add individual atoms one by one. And because we build it from the top down, when we assemble the material, we get a material that is indeed a semiconductor. Because semiconductors are really characterized by their band gap. And these are defined by wavelengths that we are no longer able to excite or to detect a photon with that energy. So these are the wavelengths for which the electrons do not absorb in these materials, because these materials do not allow electrons to absorb a photon that has that wavelength. Therefore, the material is a semiconductor. Now we have built materials for devices and all we have shown that they are working. But what is really interesting is that. And I will tell you why this is. When you have a semiconductor, what happens
