J2EE: The Complete Reference, James Keogh.The present invention relates generally to a wall fitting, and more particularly to a novel wall fitting which utilizes a resilient inner layer and a rigid outer layer, forming a substrate that supports an insulating material, such as fiberglass, provided between the layers for use in a wall fitting. In the past, various wall fittings have been employed for the purpose of constructing a vertical support structure for a television or radio mounting bracket. Such wall fittings in the past have been designed for a particular application, but not for universal use, nor have they been designed to provide a resilient lower member or substrate forming a resilient support structure. Furthermore, known wall fittings are not designed to include a rigid upper member cooperating with a resilient inner member to form a support structure for a television or radio mounting bracket. In addition, known wall fittings have not been designed to provide means for securing such fittings in the wall fitting structure.Saturday, June 28, 2010 Read about the events of the Jewish day for comments and discussion.
