Q: A generic collection with unique elements Consider the following example: `class Foo { public T Member; public bool IsUnique { get; set; } }` `Foo.Member` will be unique in any collection, is there any way to make a `Foo` which is unique in a collection? EDIT: `foo1.Member == foo2.Member == "foo1.Member!= foo2.Member"`. `foo1` and `foo2` can be in the same collection, so there's no `Foo.Collection` for example. A: In order to do that you would need to override the `GetHashCode()` function to always return the same hashcode for the same member even though you're using a different object. This is only possible if you're using your own type, since the .Net framework will call the `Object` version of the function first. But that leaves open the problem of adding two `foo` objects, one set to false and one set to true, and having them both be considered equal. I can think of two ways of dealing with that: You could keep a reference to the bar object and use that to check for equality. If you're using .Net 4.5, this will make the comparisons case-insensitive, which might be a useful feature to have. However, if you only ever use a single class for your `Foo` objects, this might not be practical. You could store a collection of the unique values. This way, you can still
