h3techa new computer monitor for ipad: the wifibockthis is the 5th picture in our series of computer monitors.the “wifibock” is capable of receiving and demodulating packet data, according to ieee 802.11 and 802.11g protocols, for improved stability and reliability.“the apple ipad stands for portability, convenience, and ease-of-use, and the wifibock provides users with the key combination of these three features,” says venet maruti, vice president and general manager of dcx. “we designed the wifibock with an interface that is compatible with the apple ipad. the wireless connection from the base of the wifibock to an ipad provides a connection from a small and lightweight device to a large, more powerful device for individuals in business, government, education, and many other fields.”installing the wifibock is straightforward, and installation and removal are both easy to do. once the wifibock is installed on the cable’s rj-11 receptacle, it can be plugged directly into the ac adapter of an ipad. the wifibock operates without any additional power adapter for the ipad. the wifibock is compatible with the ipad 2, 3, and 4th generation.dcx is also offering a specialized ipad stand to provide an optimal viewing angle for the wifibock to ensure a clear and crisp image. the dcx “cyber” stand is available with or without the wifibock (figure 6). the wifibock, along with a typical bluetooth wireless headset, is a perfect solution for an ipad in a vehicle or at a coffee shop while talking on the phone.the wifibock is currently designed for use with the ipad 2, 3, and 4th generation. a keyboard receiver and a bluetooth wireless headset are also optional accessories for the wifibock. “dcx is a partner in the product development of the wifibock, and we have received a high-speed data transmission rate of 72 mbps,” venet maruti says. “this is a first for dcx, and our work has yielded excellent results.”
